LIFE WAS ALL COURTSHIP.

The Union of Gladstone and His Wife Was a Love Match That Lasted All Their Days.

Probably the marriage between William Ewart Gladstone and Catherine Glynne was what is happily known as a "love match." She was a famous beauty, and he was amply fitted to appreciate her loveliness, which from year to year he learned was as much of character as of appearance. That she was content to play the part of true helpmate all who have ever seen the couple together have borne witness. Intellectually, she was perhaps fitted to make a name for herself had she so chosen; if he had not been so exceedingly great he might have been known only as her husband. But she was satisfied to be his prop-remaining in the background when necessary, or coming to the fore if he had need of her there. HOW THE PRESIDENT WORKS.

of the Official Business Is Transacted at the White House Late at Night.

A warm June evening in Washington is not just the time for work-but it is a busy time at the white house. Upstairs nearly all the clerks and stenographers have gone, and the doorkeeper who has charge of the door of the president's office at night sits reading. The stillness and quietude grows deeper and more pronounced each hour; the croaking frogs and chirping crickets in the Mall retard the tempo of the nocturnal chorus. In the cabinet room President McKinley and Secretary Cortelyou concentrate their attention for hours upon the great mass of accumulated papers. A ring for a glass of water is the only call that has summoned the messenger during four hours of night work. Every detail is carefully systematized so that the least possible delay is avoided in the dispatch of public business. In these quiet, still hours of night the important work of the chief executive is done, and it is very long past midnight when he passes out through the double doors to the residential portion of the white house to obtain rest prebegins as early as 9:30 or even nine a life sentence after having been tri

He Didn't Know His Fellow States men Very Well But Thought

They Knew Him. Representative Gibson, of Tennessee, a recent acquisition to the house, throws his head back while he is making a speech, says a writer in Success, and talks directly at the ceiling. He is not very well acquainted with the other members, and this circumstance caused him some embarrassment lately in his home district. He was a candidate for renomination, attending many primaries and meetings. At one of the latter he met a prominent Tennessegan who knows everybody in Washington. The following dialogue ensued: "Do you know your fellow member, Mr. Smith, of Kansas? He is quite prominent, I understand."

"No-o, I can't say that I do." "Well, you must know Mr. Brown, in the front ranks? of Massachusetts, the celebrated republican orator?"

"No. I really don't remember him." "Well, I've seen him in the house, of course, but the fact is, they all know me!" WILL ASSERT ITSELF.

Genius of a Young Man Who Seeks a Life Partner Declares Itself in Face of Unsympathetic World.

The following "personal" which appeared in the columns of a daily paper a few days ago attracted almost as much attention as the war news from China. Many thought it was a joke, but it was no joke. The young man who inserted the "ad." believes every word of it: "A young man, divinely inspired, wonderfully gifted, highly sentimental, admirable orator, poet and writer, destined to become famous, desires acquaintance rarely gifted and beautiful young woman who would become his benefactress; matrimony. Divine inspiration." His name is Charles Savary; he is 21 years old, and frankly confesses that he is about the most gifted all-around intellectual performer in the civilized

"I don't know much about free silver or imperialism," said young Savary, "but I am full of new ideasliving to-day. I never heard Mr. Bryan, but I understand he is a great orator. I would like to meet him in joint debate. None of the famous debates of history would compare with our oratorical struggle, from which I would, of course, emerge victor. I don't need to have people tell me that I am a great orator; I know it.

But she was not the sort of woman to spur me on to the great deeds of which I am capable. She proved herself to be of the common clay." From all of this it may be inferred that young Mr. Savary is not likely to sink from the Plimsoll line because of an overload of modesty.

EQUIPPED BY AMERICANS. Electric Underground Railway Put in Operation in London Under Contracts Let to Foreigners.

An electric underground railway has been put in operation in London, nearly all the equipment of which was furnished by this country. Consul Halstead, at Birmingham, sends the following from the London Times:

"A large part of the plant is of American manufacture. English makers, indeed, are not entirely unrepresented they have supplied, for instance, an overhead crane, some feed pumps, and some small engines for driving fansbut they cut a sorry figure beside those from the other side of the Atlantic, who have made carriages, the locomotives, cables, the main generators, the exciters, and the main engines. It cannot be said that contracts for these things were not worth the notice of home manufacturers, since the total cost of the line has been something like $2,919,900 a mile, and a substantial proportion must have been expended on equipment.

"Some other reason must, therefore, be sought to explain why they have I guess I am probably the best orator secured so little of the work. It might be said that their experience of electric traction work was too limited to enable them to carry out the contracts satisfacorily, if they had obtained them. A more comforting explanation, however, is to be found in the fact that when the contracts were being arranged the British mechanic was indulging in a strike, and, therefore, his masters were unable to offer the necessary guaranty that they would my verse has the true ring.
